

Oscar De La Hoya Accuser Withdraws Case

Posted on June 11, 2008 at 10:02 am (PST)

Ex-Scores stripper Milana Dravnel has dropped her $100 million dollar lawsuit against Oscar De La Hoya, after she claimed he falsely called her a liar when she released photos of De La Hoya where women's lingerie. An expert for La Hoya determined the pictures were "digitally altered," which means Milana "WAS LYING!"

De La Hoya's lawyer Judd Burstein told the New York Daily News:

"She was facing very large damages and so she agreed to drop the case. The case would have been dismissed anyway."

Maybe now Milana will disappear back into obscurity. It's too bad the courts don't automatically throw people like this in jail for lying.

Since experts now know the pictures were digitally altered, we now know how sleazy paparazzi agency X17 is, who bought the pictures from Milana for $70,000. They haven't filed suit against her, which leaves a lot of room for speculation that they were in on the hoax, and Milana's effort to extort money from De La Hoya.